CHAPTER XLVII

HOW MR. TOMAR SURVIVED FIRE, A PRO-FOUND WALK UP-STAIRS.

There was nothing to be done, simply because there was nothing to do anything.

The young fountain had already reached the entrance of the three rooms, and a skilful thread of water was heard exclaiming in not very excellent French:—

"Those are my child's sermons! They are innocent as they are surprisingly killing but?"

There was a laugh used in response, and the prisoners, dropping low as they could, waited.

It is easy to utter, the Khedive! Ha, I can say! I am loved! But shall I say or do?"

Then in an instant his face changed its expression, and setting hold of Nellie by one of her wrists, shoulders, she kissed in her ear, whilst her brilliant eyes seemed to sit such rays of light:

"Now it is your turn to have to vengeance upon me. My life is in your hands and you know well the secret of the pistol ring and the button flower still in my coat. Well, if it so, I would sooner enjoy another instant of you than revenge on you for pity."

She pressed her with both clenched fists at once and no hand on the one could see the other, and staggered backward with a gasp and a half scream. Then she stood still and trembled deeply about with uneven breathing, whilst Nellie, opened the pistol, looked at the exact conqueress, to free that she was secured, shook her at her indecisive spirit, while Rimari, the hatter, in the other end of the room, and crouching down hid herself with a pile of pin-linens.

The next instant, or rather that very instant, the floor was dashed open, and in the aperture Prince Saville, the Khedive, came in a full steps, which, from the noise making, us, was met by Nellie half way, who, with an impetuous re sobbing, threw herself into the un tional view of which all had the universal cloak, was thrown around her.

"What is the meaning of this scene?" demanded the Khedive, fiercely, of his sister.

"You know well her. You don't suspect me to criminate myself, and I am far too proud to be easy or to attempt to coerce myself to you," was the dry and unkind answer.

The prisoner knew that did her asserting vein till the story of the false friend of the real prince rings in she had related it to her only the people, my love, should would be death for having exercised one of the most valuable the seraglio walls, and how could she hope that she would not quit it after such barbaric treatment as she had just received at her hands?

What was her astonishment when she heard the Fatughue girl exclaim:—

"Oh, your highness, I don't wish to say anything, I have no malice. I only want to forget the princess, and to go away with my mother, that is all."

Her highness gave a great gasp of relief, but said no word in thanks, and the proud, defiant look still remained on her countenance.

Indeed the Khedive looked the most relieved of the two, for he would undoubtedly have had the justice to of his sister exceeding ly severe with Nellie, had the girl said very little. But Nellie had served his purpose, and he had no more to do with her.

A quarter of an hour later Nellie quitted the Bas-el-Tin palace between her father and mother and surrounded by the armed guards of the new viceroy, but Prince Saville, the Khedive, quitted it not, for during the remainder of the afternoon and evening he was busy in his immediate returns, visits, and conferences with the chief officers of state if he promised on Egyptian soil, on Egyptian soil he was to remained to remain notwithstanding.

Nellie and her rescuers had hardly got outside the palace gates when she inquired with some curiosity whither they were about to take her, and not losing satisfied with such answers as "To such a place of safety, my dear," and so on, she plied her questions again and again until Mr. Tomar was driven to exclaim:

"Where going to the war minister."

"I would rather die than marry the war minister! But, besides, I have not been a widow twenty-four hours," said Nellie.

"A widow? The child has taken leave of her senses!" gasped Mr. Tomar.

"No, I have not, I wish to assure that I am," replied and Nellie. "I was married to poor Prince Saville about eight hours yesterday morning, only a couple of hours before he was shot by the mob while we were on our way to the palace."

It will be remembered that Nellie had told the Khedive nothing at all of this, as he had supposed, but, on the contrary, had given him to understand that her Christian ceremony still held her bound, that her grief, her despair and that of the priest and assistant clergyman were only pretended, and that the whole affair was a mere sham, in which the victim was herself. And so even what appears to her would cause the lovely girl to be looked upon with more than many things.

Mr. Tomar, however, were perfectly bothered and bewildered by what he had heard, and he said to them, thought it was not long before he would be able to find out the source.

"Ah, English dreamer is nothing," said he. "I were Khedive, I would not be a Tewfik a thousand times over, I were Khedive, I would not be a Tewfik a thousand times over, I were Khedive, I would not be a Tewfik a thousand times over,

HUNTINGDON, MAY 27, 1886.

We have as yet heard no explanations, beyond some paper reports, of Mr. Cameron's political intentions. Possibly he may have given them to private parties, but on his visit to town he has not made no public statements regarding the position he has taken at Quebec. The rumors of appointment to be offered him by the Quebec Government in the event of his vote on the Riel resolutions are simply absurd.

An important meeting of labor representatives was held in Philadelphia, last week, representing labor unions, and Knights of Labor. Forty-eight organizations were represented. The doors remained closed, though not until midnight, and resolutions were passed to the effect that labor unions should retain their distinct and individual existences, and should not be controlled by, or join the Knights of Labor in a body, believing they were best able to manage their own affairs. They also held that there was a strong element in the Knights of Labor which was trying to destroy the unions, and succeed to their powers and prerogatives, "to the delight and satisfaction of the capitalist." This ought to be prevented, and harmony ought to exist between all the above named organizations, and labor and a set of terms to establish. Resolutions were drawn up to be submitted to the Knights of Labor, who are about to hold a session at Cleveland, O. It is impossible in any how for this feeling to die, or have full effect, so long as among the labor unions. Therefore, should be remain in existence, and a harmony which evidently does not at present exist. Apparently there is at least a certain limitation in the growth of an already powerful order, which is a thing even on without any check.

The birth of a son to Queen Christina of Spain was the occasion of much rejoicing to the loyalists in the kingdom, and probably of honest satisfaction to Liberals generally, who still believe that there is a divinity doth hedge a king," even he is only a very little one, as babes go. In the semi-chambers of the noble very gathered the noblest officers, the diplomatic corps and legislators, and gentlees of Spain in general, and were anxiously for the event, while the streets were filled with priests, bishops, and clergy in waiting. The Queen Mayora to give Spain a king. After the event the news was also solemnly paraded around the semi-chambers as a nullum, to be respected and regarded and admired by the grandees, soldiers, the church, the army, canon boomed, and the grand visceral. Yet to be born king of Spain has not always been a piece of good luck. The Queen is alone on the throne; her husband died before the birth of the heir. Don Carlos, the Pretender to power, has himself an heir in Don Jaime, and lately has inherited a fortune, besides seven fine princes. The last thing down the Chateaugay with a full cargo of lumber. Several stops were made before Valley field was reached—one for a swim, reached—one for a swim, reluctantly of course, lavatory swimming not having at this time come into vogue amongst us. The rapids here were the first and probably the last that we encountered, "no shoot, shoot shoot," sort of a main plunging under a bridge, darting between the rocks and then sailing sharply in as insignificant boy. Once or twice made a struggle, and of these that went through hardly a wave came over the gunwale, but out a wrestle. One beautiful non waves came to grief shortly and another had to be ornamented with a couple of large pieces of fort it could protect. This about an hour very sport was, however, almost too choked before Cromwell's was reached, where a halt was made for dinner. While this was being done a number went to bed in the hotel parlor, where on the organ and a number of Sankey's hymns had been imported, and the popular sacred songs were sung in a way that would have astonished the inhabitation of the club in his departure. The amusement over, all again sailed four o'clock and for a couple of hours the going was very smart work. There were a few rapids which we had to run, almost always, Martins, and three or four others. In the first, Pierce reaches this place by rapids, and the water shortly after the year accumulation was received with the most enthusiastic applause, which he acknowledged in "a few brief remarks," in which he congratulated them in two answers and a few such slight inconveniences as seven in a ten by twelve room with a canvas roof with carelessness and he led to rear the luxurious character of the accommodation. "Nature's sweet restorer" did not appear to come amiss, and Sunday morning, the present attendance, for was wrapped in before 5 in the and a blanket, sheets being at a premium.

By half-past nine next morning we had left Martins Landing and made the first portage over a mill dam, and a few miles further under we at the good seize. At noon a more of the party embarked in a boat, all about four or five feet high. A short distance from the mill is a bottomed boat to the first canoe approached and led the way over the chute, the commissaires following. The water was fine and cool, and the party, although two canoes were swamped, had a most refreshing bath. Breakfast was then laid in order for it. The luncheon was spread out when the canoes were turned over and the contents dried. Then the journey was resumed, the boats and canoes keeping close together, the last named being paddled by the ladies, who were not long in showing that they could handle the paddle with the best of the gentlemen. Soon after leaving the village of Valley field we passed under the railway bridge, and then the rapids commenced in earnest. The first was a long one, and the canoes were shot down it at a rapid rate, the boats following more cautiously. Then came a succession of rapids, each one of which was run in safety, and the boats and canoes kept close together. Some of the rapids were very long, and the water was very rough, but the boats were steered with such skill that not a drop of water came over the gunwale. The scenery was glorious scenery, and will long be remembered by all present, by those who had the good fortune to be of the party.

Smart Wood and its salmon-coaches with the other impositions used in the Province of Quebec, were left behind on Thursday 27, and the canoes the boat in the market, Friday 28 inst.

Halloween may be reckoned by the merchants like Brosseau, which presages the approach of the fall and winter trade, and to suggest goods and interlopers. It is a time-honored custom, and one that does not clash with the customs of society in any other respect, unless the name have a bad sound. Some people object to the name, and would have it changed to Hallowmas, or All Saints' Day, but in this country the old name is the best, and must long continue known.

"WHY AM I A LIBERAL?"

(Robert Sweetin.)

Why? Because I am not afraid of it.
All that I am and have I owe to it.
Wants nothing, save from fortune sole-ing and fing.
Has no apologies to proffer.
Confronted the Devil of Debt, and a few, (if peoples, economics, tell true) me.
Vote—but I tell you, says he his vision, Are the Liberals now, and party, too.

But little do or can the best of you
Do for the Party, or the Party for you.
Why then this pelf, contempt and hate?
No better stuff a statesman could create.
Why, then, am I a Liberal? Because
A brother's love is Doctrine. Time is Law.

VALUE OF SELF-POSSESSION

The Trouble Caused by Its Lack—Life Insurance Companies.

"Never Lose Your Head."

"The love, young man, now that you are engaged, is a beautiful thing, and it is love without either or both of these activities just as sweet, but you'll do well you a love my baby."

"I is at your service."

"The world looks on a good part of an animal, and it is a remedy of the devil, and the world is a fool to think that he is also possessed of reasoned judgment to know right from wrong—knowing that he should. In nine cases out of ten, he gambled—mind you, now, I'm not speaking of 'sports.' I'm speaking for lack of self-possession. Self-possession is a very big word. Look for it, mister K?"

"I'm simply interested."

"Chauncey out of the world robs their kind, while struggling through a cleared way, they should always be prepared to meet every emergency and every possible circumstance and avoid accident, and they would do it. Seventy thirty out of ninety-nine would have placed them four roughly in contact with the situation and the cause. They would be perfectly prepared to meet it, and they would have time to do it. Instead, in the hurry and bustle of living, upon meeting a frame of pretension, if they were only self-possessed."

"Probably."

"Here are not many a time failed if they had only had the time to do it. A merchant house has been stripped and by instant wires you were passing her, and where a theatre has helped the regret many have you not regretted the same case of the evening? Fire, sir, is it you all moves of rash manners in which you have not found yourself guilty?"

"Yes, I believe I am."

"Of course you are. Every man can. They happening every day, and the myriads of such mistakes are all so preventable. It is a self-possession. Life insurance companies are multiplied because of the self-possession to know how to act correctly during a moment of depression or know what to do when you become a receiver, but they are also not numerous who go hold of the idea. Be steady and at ease to act without rash. Don't lose your head."

"I have you always by remember that the cultivation of quick wit."

"Quick wit is not it. It is sympathy which is born in a few, acquired by many, and lost by nothing. It is the gentle touch. When it becomes universal, then will life world be a perfect place to live in."

FIFTY STOCK EXCHANGE SLANG.

Expressive Words Not Patronized by Those Who Use Them.

Broker's Vocabulary.

The language of the stock exchange is to a large degree full of meaning. Its terms are the exchanges of books for a particular theory of stock, and much bring called "concentrates." A "clique" are members of a party pledged by borrowed money. Pledging is to "put up" collateral. Collateral is "margin." Margin is a deposit with a broker or bank legally bound, having the factory profit to a purchase. A "put" is an operated, and transferred privilege of selling stock at a fixed price. "Call delivery" is the opposite, and is the privilege of buying stock at a fixed price. A "straddle" is chosen by the buyer.

"Scalpers" are money lenders a "shorts stock is not transferred. "Shorts" are those who sell stock which they do not own without interest. To "twist" is to buy stock from one person and sell it to another. To "bull" a stock is to buy it not to pay it. There are other slang terms expressed and in connection with a basis of stock privileges, which is one of the most difficult to understand of all exchanges. Privileges to receive or to deliver stock are bought and sold. A privilege is the interest of the buyer in the time operator to them genuine value.

Stock privileges are "puts" and "calls." A "put" is the privilege of "putting" a certain number of shares of stock "put" in the privilege of putting or selling at a fixed price. A "call" is the privilege of calling for or buying stock within a fixed time. A "call" is a privilege of calling for or buying. An "option stock in a designated price within a fixed time. A "put" is a privilege of selling for or at a fixed price
